Mt. TARRENGOWER - a silent witness

On 26th September 1836, Major Thomas Mitchell passed south of Mt Tarrengower on his return to Sydney after exploring the country he called 'Australia Felix'. He took bearings of the mountain to assist in making a map of the area.

The first European settlers to arrive in the Maldon area were pastoralists who grazed sheep and cattle. Land was taken up in 1839 by Lockton Mackinnon, who called his run 'Tarragower'. At the same time a licence was issued for the adjacent run 'Calra Curra' on which the town of Maldon is now situated. That property soon was held by the Bryant family and the area around Maldon became known as Bryants Ranges.

In December 1853, rich gold was found in the gullies about Bryants Ranges.

Charles Thatcher, a famous golffields minister of the times, wrote a ballad called 'Rush Away', its chorus commencing 'Rush, my jolly pals, rush away, To Bryants Ranges, rush away'.

Mount Tarrengower is roughly, give or take a few kilometres, the centre of Victoria. Near the table to the east of the tower is a survey point marker, with number directly beneath the centre of the tower. These survey points are still used by surveyors today in identifying other feature locations in the region.

Tarrengower is thought to be an Aboriginal word meaning 'big rough hill'. The birth of the mountain belongs to a volcanic period in the geological history of central Victoria. It is made from hornfels, a metamorphic rock, which has been heated and hardened by volcanic action.

The road up the mountain was constructed so that the tower could be dragged up the hill by horses. It was first used for a hill climb for motor cars in 1928. Participating makes of cars in 1928 were Lanch, Dugatti, Graham-Paige, Morris, Austin, De Soto, Chrysler, Riley, and Ford. The race has been an annual event ever since. Today it is a 'classics only' event held each October. Vintage motorcycles are also a feature of the Mount Tarrengower Hill Climb, the oldest motor sport event in Australia.

The Friends of Mount Tarrengower is a not-for-profit organisation that promotes the mountain and its history. It is a registered charity and is a member of the Victorian Government's Heritage Victoria.
